

My first Impression of Japan

The time in japan was one of the best 2 weeks in my life. When we first arrived, I got a glimpse of the weather in japan. It was hot and sticky. But we saw another side of Japan's weather as well. After 1 week and half, it started raining heavily.

On our first day of school, our buddies picked us up and showed us around. The school is huge and uncomparable to the Goethe-Gymnasium. The classes were interesting as well. Even though our japanese isn't good enough to understand the teachers, we still tried to find kanjis that we understand or tried to pick up some words that we understand. It was like a game. The english classes were fun as well.

The lunch breaks were the most fun though! I got to eat with my buddy and her friends. It might have been the best thing during the whole exchange time. We ate together, talked and laughed so much. Their english is better than my japanese, but we still needed to ask Mao (my buddy) or google translate sometimes to understand each other. I really miss Mao and her friends.

On the two days, that we got to spend together, we went with sophie, hoang-an and their buddies to disney land and akihabara. We went to eat monjayaki, which was a super fun and delicious experience.

All in all, the japan exchange was a really fun experience, where we got to see a different country with a different culture.
